"How the Weak Negotiates Identity and Power: Discrimination, Solidarity, and Power in Multiracial America." (based on award-winning dissertation)

Interviewed by Scope Conditions Podcast (co-hosted by Alan Jacobs (UBC) and Yang-Yang Zhou (Dartmouth))

Winner of the 2022 Best Dissertation Award, Urban and Local Politics, APSA

Winner of the 2020 Best Paper Award, Asian Pacific American Politics, WPSA

Contrary to conventional wisdom, the book argues that racial discrimination is not sufficient to explain when in-group solidarity emerges among minoritized populations. Despite the racial hierarchy in the United States, ethnic groups who have experienced discrimination have not always united politically. Before the late 1960s, national origin groups from Asia and Latin America did not come together as Asian Americans and Latinos. Their political strategy shifted during this historical juncture because of the policy changes. Lyndon B. Johnson's War on Poverty programs expanded the American welfare state; however, these new safety net programs were implemented within the existing biracial framework. Street-level bureaucrats faced difficulty in classifying disadvantaged ethnic groups that did not fit into this prevalent image of the minority group. In response, non-target groups solved this collective problem by reinventing and organizing themselves in racial terms. The book demonstrates how disadvantaged and invisible minority groups leverage identity formation and transformation as a strategic instrument to acquire political power and advance their agendas.
